In home aged care workers next up for vaccination

Workers who deliver aged care services via the home care package and CHSP programs will be able to get vaccinated against COVID-19 during the second phase of the national vaccine rollout.

Prioritised front line health workers, including a targeted 318,000 aged and disability care staff and 190,000 residents, started getting their jabs of the Pfizer vaccine under phase 1a of the rollout this week.

Phase 1b of the rollout includes staff who deliver services through CHSP and HCP, the health department says. It also includes people aged over 70, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders over 55 and people with an underlying medical condition, including those with a disability.

Recipients of home and community care will be able to get vaccinated at vaccination clinics or GP practices once they become eligible.

Digital Transformation Hub to help NFPs thrive amid COVID-19 disruptions

With the COVID-19 pandemic exposing major technology challenges for many not for profits, a new technology hub is being developed to help build the digital capability of the sector.

Last year's Digital Technology in the Not-for-Profit Sector survey report revealed that despite half of all charity staff not feeling confident when using new technology, 40 per cent of organisations were not offering employees any training to improve their digital skills.

This Infoxchange Group report also found that only 30 per cent of NFPs had suitable technology to help staff adapt to working from home during the pandemic.

In an effort to address the sector's technological shortcomings, Infoxchange Group is building a new Digital Transformation Hub with funding from the Lord Mayor's Charitable Foundation and Gandel Philanthropy.

This hub will include capacity building programs, access to technology solutions, online resources and tailored advice to support organisations.

Infoxchange CEO David Spriggs said the hub would be an important resource especially given the workplace disruptions caused by COVID-19.

"[COVID-19 has] emphasised how important it is for not for profits to have efficient, reliable technology in place to keep supporting communities and making the biggest impact possible," Spriggs said.

"The Digital Transformation Hub will address these challenges in a one stop shop that will empower not for profits to deliver services more effectively, improve staff productivity and better serve communities in need."

Cerebral Palsy Support Network has recently invested in improving its digital capabilities and CEO Scott Sheppard said he understood how difficult this could be for charities.

He said this new hub would be of great use for the sector.

"Moving to the cloud has transformed our ability to work remotely and share information securely, allowing us to communicate to and provide better support for individuals and families living with cerebral palsy," Sheppard said.

"The new Digital Transformation Hub will empower and assist not for profits across Australia to undertake their own digital journey and provide even better support for their clients."

Gandel Philanthropy CEO Vedran Drakulić OAM said COVID-19 had uncovered digital inequality in the sector faced by many smaller NFPs.

He said the hub would help NFPs be better prepared for future crises and ensure they maintain efficient service delivery throughout.

"The Infoxchange Group is arguably best placed to provide this sort of digital capacity building and organisational development, and we very much look forward to seeing first-hand the positive impact this initiative will have in the sector," Drakulić said.

The hub is expected to launch sometime this year.

Request for tender now open: expanded funding for Goods, Equipment and Assistive Technology for older Australians

The Australian Government is committing funding of up to $10 million in 2020-21 and $10 million in 2021-22 to provide high quality, value for money and equitable access to Goods, Equipment and Assistive Technology (GEAT) for older Australians.

The department is supporting this commitment through an open request for tender (RFT) that establishes a panel of one or more providers/agents. Panel members will have national capability and capacity to source, supply, install, and maintain GEAT to older Australians through the Commonwealth Home Support Programme (CHSP).

This tender will enable the department to trial an alternative funding approach to current GEAT grant arrangements. It will source providers or agents to administer and provide GEAT across Australia, ensuring equitable access to meet the changing needs of CHSP clients.

Current GEAT providers who wish to tender should note that, if successful, their existing GEAT grant funding will be retained. The funds for this tender are separate to the CHSP grant agreement.

Tenders must be lodged by 2:00pm (AEDT) Tuesday, 16 March 2021.

For more information about this RFT, visit the Austender website.

The Aged Care Voluntary Industry Code of Practice

The Aged Care Voluntary Industry Code of Practice is designed for providers to continually set the bar higher – so that each day they can aspire to provide better services to older Australians than they did the day before. It is a Code that places ageing Australians, their families, carers and advocates at its heart so that aged care organisations and their workers are inspired to provide continuously improved and innovative, high quality care and supports. It brings together the aged care industry under a single code of practice.

This has never been achieved before.

We encourage providers to pledge their commitment to the Code and for consumers, workers and their organisations to state their support for the Code.

The Code sets out how Industry leaders intend to guide their organisations – and the sector – in delivering care services that reflect the rights and needs of Australians as they age.

The Code aims to help ‘good’ providers to become ‘great’ and ‘great’ providers to become ‘world class’.

The Code is an industry-led set of Principles with their own embedded outcomes that allow industry self-regulation through transparent performance reporting. The Code provides guidance on how to do this. And as more and more organisations and workers sign up to the Code there will be more and more peers to support one another.

The Code provides an opportunity for providers of aged care services aim to perform beyond the expectations of the communities they serve and the consumers for whom they are accountable. It provides for workers in aged care to realise this level of performance. It enables older Australians, their families, carers and advocates, who access and engage with aged care services to know that the measures and activities put in place aim to achieve quality, safe and personalised aged care services and supports.

The Council is proud of the sector’s engagement on this important initiative. The sector has invested considerable time and commitment to get the Code right. Considerable work still needs to be done over the coming eight months to refine the processes associated with the Code. The Council will be undertaking extensive consultations with the sector to finalise this by 30 June 2021.

The Code is designed to continually improve and evolve over time, reflecting changing community expectations, laws and regulations. The Council in consultation with consumers, industry and workforce, will review the impact of the Code annually to ensure continuous improvement. We will work with industry, consumers, workforce and government to understand the effect the Code is having in raising industry benchmarks for care and service delivery, and adapt the Code to continue to inspire providers in their goal to achieve higher levels of care and service across the industry.
